

They say charity begins at home and in the case of KMF (Precision Sheet Metal) home is that of Stoke City and the Britannia Stadium, where two teams from the company took part in a charity football match.

Played over the full 90 minutes the only consideration to lack of match fitness was the availability of rolling substitutes, with the appearance of Radim Vaculin, KMF's European business development manager giving the game an international flavour. In spite of this, the game turned out to be a one sided affair, with the shopfloor team putting a healthy five goals into the net of the office staff team, giving away only a single consolation goal in return.

To ensure fair play throughout, the match was officialiated by a referee and linesmen provided by the Premier League side and there were no reports of any serious injuries. With each player contributing £20 for his appearance on the hallowed turf of the Britannia Stadium the employees at KMF raised over £1,300 from the game.

However, the generosity of the people at KMF does not stop at kicking a football around for 90 minutes, as another group of staff members continued the tradition of entering The Race for Life. They ran the 5K course at Staffordshire's Trentham Gardens in full fancy dress and the sponsorship raised, which is in excess of £2,800, will be presented to Cancer Research.
