

KMF website has its head in the cloud

KMF (Precision Sheet Metal) has unveiled its new website that brings added user-friendliness and greater interactivity between the company and its customers thanks to the implementation of cloud technology.

The new KMF website has been designed to bring the company closer to its customers through the use of cloud technology, allowing users to upload/download files relevant to their business with KMF from any computer, iPad or smartphone wherever they are located.

"What we have created with the new website is an experience that matches the progressive nature of our business," stated Brian Dibble, KMF's engineering manager. "It will allow each user to gain quick and simple access to information relevant to their business and facilitate transfer of information in a secure manner to any location in the world. Existing customers will be contacted by KMF with details of how to access the information.

"The new website will have a positive effect on how we do business in the coming years as we continue to develop new markets outside of the UK."
